

Project Experience

National Primary Care Collaborative Group

Dates

2004 - 2007

The Project

A number of Flinders University experts were involved in the Australian Primary Care Collaboratives Program designed to support Australian general practices in delivering systematic and sustainable improvements to the quality of care they provide to their patients. Program outcomes included improved health outcomes for patients with chronic disease through better chronic disease management systems, improved overall systems of care and business efficiency, improved patient access to primary care and enhanced medical software and reporting functionality.
